

3*THE ECONOMIC TIMES

TUESDAY 23 FEBRUARY 2010

JARO EDUCATION

Global career: International MBA

Industries need managers and not MBAs. Jaro Education is doing exactly this by building programmes that make global managers

CORPORATE world has become increasingly demanding. They need thought leaders who can lead the front, professionals who do not respond to change but lead the change and who can conquer the corporate battle. At the same time, globalisation has become the most significant development in the world since the Industrial Revolution and a well-structured, multi-disciplinary and international management education can only ensure success in the global market.

Considering the growing demands of the Indian and global organisations and to improve the employability factors, Jaro Education was established by Sanjay Salunkhe, who is also its Director, and aims to provide management programmes for students, working professionals and entrepreneurs who want to become managers and bring the desired change in business organisations or start-ups. Extensive research by the faculty in consultation with industry leaders and the academia has brought about innovative and flexible programmes like the International Executive MBA and the International MBA which aims to impart knowledge of national as well as international business cultures, environment and management.

SANJAY SALUNKHE

In order to achieve this goal, Jaro Education has joined hands with United Business Institutes, Belgium, Europe, and other top business schools and universities in India and overseas to provide its students the best in management education. Cutting across geographical limitations, aspirants and experienced professionals from across the globe can get the best and latest in management education. This endeavour aims to provide quality management education at affordable prices with flexibility.

Says Sanjay Salunkhe: "Industries need managers, not MBAs." It is in this context we would like to develop global managers and leaders with knowledge of international management and understanding of culture sensitivity.

For details contact: 022-67135100,
Email: ubi@jaro.in, Website: www.jaro.in

